Science served my personality and mind well through being rigorous in establishing baselines before any progress could be measurably possible.

Motivational & Organisational Psychology were my passions, I just "got it", those parts came easy. Six years of devoted study and part-time earnings later I left Uni with a full brain ready to help heal and fix the world. Ha! Realising I wasn't quite ready to sell my own self into 60 hours of slavery fixing fear, doubt, and trauma, I chose global travel instead. Hey I was already used to being poor! I also doubted my ability to genuinely assist & provide value for money immediately after Uni. It didn't feel right being 'straight out of school' and having suffered no debilitating long-term traumas.

Returning from myriad adventures, learnings, and full of more excited energy I turned to the corporate world and implemented my education in creating happy loyal clients wherever I worked. After becoming the most effective annual sales closer the second year in a row at a television station, I was offered the host position of a tv program. This was a mighty steep learning curve that I really enjoyed. This tv show became an iconic means of growing the revenue for the Businesses that chose to use it. It was great fun. High pressure of managing so many facets of a successful tv show, but immensely rewarding.

Blah blah blah ... are you bored yet? I find your story far more exciting than my own!

OK then ... I'll continue

I was headhunted from this to train Sales Teams for a year. Head-hunted again I became a Nationwide Business Development Manager & created a proven system of increasing revenue called "Sales are Fun, and Asking for Money is easy".

I married my best friend and we were doing really well with our happy family including two lovely sons. Eventually realising we all prefer being physically warm, and wanting to assist a greater number, we sold our home and gifted much of what we'd accumulated over our lives and emigrated to a warmer climate in a larger country. Four of us with 5 suitcases. Makes me laugh looking at our bravery now. It took 2 years of starting from scratch to get securely set-up in our new home in a new country. That's 2 years completely out of equity growth and financial security. What's of far greater worth than money? Yep ... happiness. The smiles on our childrens' faces now that we can live outside too, are worth the dance-steps of starting over again ... two steps forward, sideways two, do a twirl and back one, two steps forward, sideways two, do a twirl and back one ... phew! Saying that, I'd rather be dancing than morbidly adhering to a prescribed "2.5 children & a picket-fence".

I'm proud of these experiences because they all rest on conscious decisions of the 'greatest good for the greatest number". I'm peaceful because I genuinely help solve challenges for individuals: personally and professionally. Along with my family, I live joyfully, to the detriment of no Other. This has evolved into my ethos. Serving the mental wellbeing of Others in aligning with purpose, experiencing clarity, and working to a completed goal is my privilege.

Getting to return to my original motivations of serving and managing the wellbeing of Others proffers the realisation of all I've chosen to learn and implement to date.

Getting to witness the deep comprehension of what I teach, and knowing that when this penny drops, healthy knowledge cannot be unlearnt. Witnessing the new-found Peace in another person is my holy grail. Living to serve and manage wellness. My privilege.

You now know me (kind of).

Let's talk and see how much gain we can discover for you to BE more of your best You.

With much respect,

And much kindness,
